

FIXED ASSET GUIDE

In both of these instances, agencies should determine whether the expenditure increases the future service potential of the asset, or merely maintains the existing level of service. When the future service level has been increased, the new cost is capitalized.

Additions and Improvements: For additions and improvements reported in the governmental or proprietary funds, the carrying amount of the old assets and associated accumulated depreciation, if applicable, should be removed from the accounting records, if the amount is known. The cost of the new asset should be capitalized. If the original cost and accumulated depreciation are not known, capitalize the additional cost.

Additions (Extensions, Enlargements or Expansions): Any addition to an asset should be capitalized since a new asset has been created. For example, the addition of a wing to a building or the addition of an air conditioning system to an office building increases the service potential of that facility and should be capitalized. Other examples of additions include:

- elevator or dumbwaiter
- fire alarm systems
- security windows
- sprinkler systems (internal)
- acoustical treatment

Impairment of Capital Assets: A capital asset is considered to be impaired when its service utility has permanently declined significantly and unexpectedly. Events or changes in circumstances that may be indicative of impairment include evidence of physical damage, changes in legal or environmental factors, technological changes or evidence of obsolescence, changes in the manner or duration of use of a capital asset and construction stoppage.

Generally an asset would be considered impaired if both:

- The decline in service utility of the asset was large in magnitude and the event or change in circumstances was outside the normal life cycle of the asset.

In the event a reportable capital asset is impaired, there are two options for reporting the impairment:

- If the asset will no longer be used, the asset should be written down to the lower of carrying value or fair market value.
- If the asset will continue to be used, the asset should be written down by the estimated impairment loss, as defined in GASB Statement No. 42, "Accounting and Financial Reporting for Impairment of Capital Assets and for Insurance Recoveries."

Leasehold Improvements

Leasehold improvements are defined as improvements made to leased property that will revert to the lessor at the expiration of the lease. Leasehold improvements include construction of new buildings or improvements made to existing structures by the lessee, who has the right to use these leasehold improvements over the term of the lease. Moveable equipment or office furniture that is not attached to the leased property is not considered a leasehold improvement.
