

Cultural Identity

Our culture identity has an impact on how we behave, think, feel, and see not only ourselves but how we see others and the world around us. What makes up one's cultural identity? I based mine of the diversity wheel and my own personal values. Ethnicity, traditions, religion, age, physical ability, gender, sexual orientation, and family all have an effect on a person's identity in their culture. Knowing my cultural identity starts with "Who am I?"

I am a Caucasian born in Appleton, Wisconsin on October 18, 1990. My full name is Jenna Ann Washuleski. My middle name is in honor of my mother's step-mom, Ann. I am heterosexual female, and have been in a serious relationship for two years. At the age of 6 my family moved to a small town named Brandon. I grew up there and didn't leave until I began college.

Growing up in Brandon has had a huge influence on me. Until I was older, I never thought about diversity or culture. I grew up in a town where everyone was like me. If they weren't, the entire town knew about it. I know now that I was very sheltered growing up and that my community was overall closed minded. Knowing this now, I want to raise my children differently. I hope I can expose them to things I was completely unaware of until I was in my 20's.

My family consists of my mother, my two sisters, their children, and my two half-brothers. When I was one, my father left our family and moved away. Therefore, I have never had a close relationship with him. Because my brothers are my father's sons, I did not see much

Local Organisation, Cultural Identity and National Integration in the North Atlantic Susanne Dybbroe, Poul Brøbech Møller, 1991 This volume contains conference papers from the 3rd North Atlantic Studies Conference The papers seem to indicate a connection between progressive centralisation corresponding with increased homogeneity of culture at the national level and a concomitant relative heterogenisation of peripheral regions and minority culture in political terms expressed through the assertion of difference of local regional ethnic and other identities This heterogenisation may be defined in cultural terms as differentiation or in structural terms as expressing relative distancing from the centres of power The factors giving form and content to these movements seem to reflect institutional arrangements made by the centres in an effort to integrate peripheral communities In other words expressions of localism are linked to the manner and structure of integration in the social system or society in question This puts focus on public institutions as integrating mechanisms and possible arenas of struggle for control Paraphrasing Jenkins this volume comparing Northern Irish and Welsh nationalism the character of nationalist movements is inextricably bound up with the processes of modern state formation The focus on structures and relations of incorporation or integration is a general theme uniting the present collection of articles although this observation alone does not do justice to the breadth of perspectives taken
