

UNIT 18 ASSIGNMENT 2

TASK 1

LAB REPORT

MENDELIAN GENETICS OF CORN KIT

AIM:

The aim of this experiment to study the inheritance of the colour and shape of corn seeds using monohybrid cross and dihybrid cross.

INTRODUCTION:

Mendelian features refer to phenotypic features whose inheritance pattern is consistent with Mendel's theories of feature inheritance. Corn is a diploid organism that has been used for studying and illustrating Mendelian traits. In corn, the dominant Y gene is determining the presence of colored aleuron. Individuals with one copy of the gene will show a purple colour. Recessive phenotypes will show a yellow colour. Also in maize, the dominant S gene is producing a smooth phenotype. Smooth shapes seem hard and starchy. The recessive phenotype is producing wrinkled shapes that appear shrunken.

The chi-square test is used to investigate the role of chance in generating differences between observed values and expected values. The test relies on an external hypothesis, since it involves calculation of theoretical expected values. The test demonstrates the probability that the deviation between the expected and the observed values was only produced by chance. When the probability determined from the chi-square test is high the difference is presumed to have been generated by chance alone. Likewise, if the probability is small, it is presumed that the variance has been caused by a significant factor other than chance.

In this lab, we will learn the results of some inheritance crosses similar to those that Mendel did in his classic experiments on heredity in the colour and shape of corn seeds. We will use monohybrid cross and dihybrid cross. In addition we will learn how to use a statistical test to determine the validity of data obtained by monohybrid cross and dihybrid cross.

HYPOTHESIS:

Each phenotype is inherited as an allele through a single gene locus.

EQUIPMENT:

- 4 purple corns
- 3 yellow corns
- 2 corn parental cross cards

METHOD:

1. Get three yellow corns.
2. Count all seeds yellow and smooth as well as yellow and shrunken.
3. Write down the numbers of yellow and smooth as well as yellow and shrunken and calculate their sum.
