

Writing Assignment Two: Definitional Argument

Words do not have essential properties; that is, they are constructs of the world in which we live. They are dynamic and powerful instruments that evolve over time and vary depending on context. One of the misconceptions of words is that their definitions do not change. Definitions determine what something or someone is—they can result in inclusion and exclusion. They also help us to recognize that classifications change over time and are the result of cultural, social, and political forces that may come and go. So, rather than thinking of definitions as natural and unchanging, definitional arguments allow us to recognize classifications as unnatural and constructed. That is, definitions serve certain agendas at certain times while ignoring or suppressing others.

The definitional essay assigns additional meaning to a given word (often, a word whose definition is under debate), and it argues that the word needs to be understood in an additional way. Your objective is not to do away with the old meaning, but rather to argue that the word also needs to be used and understood in terms of your additional meaning.

Assignment Description:

Main Topic: X is/is not a Y because it has (or does not have) feature A, B, C, and so on.

Write a logos-centered argument that develops a definitional claim of the form “X is/is not a Y,” where Y is a term with a disputed definition. Your argument will have a criteria section in which you develop an extended definition of your Y term, and a match section in which you argue that your X does/does not meet the criteria for Y. You will also conduct research on your topic to help develop your Y criteria and support your argument.

When selecting a topic, you may want to focus on large, national issues, state issues, or issues in pop culture/the media. (Sample topics might include: “President Obama is a conservative,” “alcoholism is not a disease,” “standardized testing is not education,” “NASCAR is a sport,” “Panda Express is not gourmet food,” etc.) It is crucial that you choose a topic that has relevance in today’s world. Also, your topic must make a statement that is not completely accepted.

*In order to construct your definition, you should consult authorities on your controversial word. A dictionary does not have ethos on any particular subject. For example, if you have chosen to extend the definition of “feminist,” you might consult Betty Friedan, Gloria Steinem, Simone de Beauvoir, bell hooks, etc. Encyclopaedia Britannica and Merriam-Webster’s English Dictionary are not specialized texts. To simply copy a definition from the dictionary undermines the very nature of this assignment.

Assignment Goals:

- Focus on a specific rhetorical purpose, namely, the writing of a definitional argument
- Explore the multiple facets (ideological, social, cultural, political, economic, historical) of issues and use writing to construct informed, critical positions about these topics
- Identify the kind of ideological work a written text can undertake and how it serves to persuade readers to accept a particular account of an issue as accurate and effective
- Practice developing claims and supporting them with evidence
