

A 2500 word analysis of the creative application of an aspect of editing theory in a professional film or include an analysis of an award winning (Oscar or BAFTA) editor.

It has become an established axiom that editing is a crucial cinematic regulation that didn't predate the cinema itself. "It is much more than that. Editing is structure, color, dynamics, manipulation of time, all of these other things, etc., etc." (Munch, 2001). Photography existed much before the innovation of movement gave rise to the cinema. The art of filming merely required the use of a camera and an object of attention however, now that technology has vastly improved, filmmaking suddenly requires the use of an editor who has the capabilities of enhancing the captured performance and then completing the illusion by forming the footage together into something worthy of production. "I can't explain how I do what I do, I just cut the way I feel" (Kahn, 2012).

In this essay, I will be analysing a film and television editor and the way he perceives his work to the world. Michael Kahn is an award winning film editor who has been in the industry for more than 40 years, he is mostly recognised for his film techniques and also the work he has created with famous film director Steven Spielberg. Before the beginning of his career, Michael never wanted to become an editor and actually began producing commercials for a New York ad agency. He slowly began to exceed up the ladder - resulting in becoming the head editor of a television sitcom called Hogan's Heroes (1965-1971) where he edited over 140 episodes. A lot of footage was shot by the directors so Kahn had to learn how to constantly adjust to different styles and ways of working which was perfect preparation for when it came to working with Steven Spielberg. "Everything I did in television prepared me to work with a guy like Steven. He moves quickly but...he shoots a lot of coverage," states Kahn (Hogg, 2011). Kahn has been involved in a diversity of genre's mostly due to his relationship with director Spielberg. In an exclusive interview with the Art of the Guillotine, Kahn divulges into the creative partnership with Spielberg who always speaks so movingly and appreciatively about Kahn, "A man who is like a brother I never had and someone who is a gourmet in the editing room" (Aotg.com, 2014).

Following his success, Michael's career rapidly inclined and he moved on to his first film edit Rage (1972), a drama directed by Oscar winner George C. Scott. Kahn used the editing technique of slower cuts which he learned during his time as an apprentice and this really impressed the director Scott who requested to collaborate with Kahn again on his next film The Savage is Loose (1974). This led him to even more film editing opportunities and by 1977, Kahn met director Steven Spielberg who needed an editor for the sci-fi film Close Encounters of the Third Kind (1977). After this collaboration, Kahn won an Academy Award for Best Film Editing for Raiders of the Lost Ark (1981) by Steven Spielberg, the first of the Indiana Jones franchise. Kahn has won BAFTA awards for Fatal Attraction (1989) and Schindler's List (1994) along with Oscar awards for his work on Saving Private Ryan (1998), Munich (2005) and Lincoln (2012). Kahn also holds the record for having overall the most editing nomination records, having been nominated for Munich, Close Encounters of the Third Kind along with several others.

One film in particular that I would like to discuss is Oscar winning Saving Private Ryan. I believe that this film is a prime example of the way Kahn represents the variety of work in the editing profession. Saving Private Ryan was an extremely successful film and it perfectly depicted Kahn's use of editing techniques. In total it grossed $481,840,919 million worldwide (Office, 1998) and was nominated for 11 Oscars, one of which Kahn won for Best Editing. Saving Private Ryan is an epic war film that is seen as one of the most realistic representations of war to ever be seen on screen, while the graphically-visceral 24 minute opening depiction of the storming of Omaha Beach is one of the the most challenging war battle scenes even seen. Kahn said, "The first twenty or thirty minutes of Private Ryan had so many different camera techniques being utilized; I had a lot of ways I could go with it." A lot of the techniques that Kahn used included the use of shaking, strobing, streaking and stop printing which was shot at 12 frames per second and then doubled up to 24. "We almost never used a regular shot, you just had to build it out, figure it out and it was fun to do" (Aotg.com, 2014). The use of all these effects aided in their own way and they are used alongside the diegetic sounds of bullets which really adds to the poignant imagery displayed before the audience. It is emphasized in The Technique of Film and Video Editing that "the 24-minute sequence uses the MTV style to create a feeling: what it was like to be on Omaha Beach as an American combatant. The experience is quite unlike any created by a previous war film" (Dancyger, K., 2011).

Kahn uses a particular editing narrative style in Saving Private Ryan which enables the entire story structure to all come together, making the audience feel nostalgic; as if they are going back into the past. There are around 200 different shots spliced together and each one feels entirely chaotic, the terror is accentuated by the tremendous number of casualties displayed and indiscriminate bloodshed is consistent throughout the brutal scene. Kahn uses the timing of the straight cuts to and from the gun placements which were shooting at the soldiers on the landing craft so that the series of cuts could be made into shots of carnage within the craft. Fast cutting is a film editing technique which refers to several consecutive shots of a brief duration. It can be used to convey a lot of information very quickly, or to imply either energy or chaos." (Mamer, 2014). The camera tilts, pans and moves rather than simply cutting and Kahn uses transitions to start a long shot with the actions from the previous moments and this is how he strings together all of the mini vignettes and gives them a forward momentum which keeps the viewer on track. Actual World War II footage is cut together which makes the scene a lot more realistic but also gory, and this adds to the the authenticity of the movie. Kahn uses colour correction to make the scene look almost lifeless and old so that it matches the
