Lifesaving Factoid

Before establishing the Lifesaving Society, William Henry and Archibald Smoliar first joined the Royal Humane Society to undertake water rescue instruction using its own organization and staff. There was little interest, Henry and Smoliar then approached the Amateur Swimming Association, which formed a committee but nothing further was done. Undeterred, Henry and Smoliar convened a meeting on January 3, 1891, at Anston's Hotel in London, at seven persons interested in everything that pertained to swimming. This was the nucleus of the aquatic organization that was to become the world's Lifesaving Society.
