

Sewing on buttons

To sew on buttons, set the machine by pressing the push-button to the right on the sewing guide after you have selected the material.

The symbol above the light indicates that the feed teeth should be lowered.

Remove the presser foot. Put the button in place on the garment and lower the presser bar so that the presser foot ankle is centered just behind the holes in the button. Hold the thread ends to one side. Turn the handwheel and test carefully that the needle enters the left hole of the button. The machine is set for a hole distance which suits most buttons normally used for the material you have selected but it may be necessary to adjust the width in some cases. To do this, press one of the push-buttons under the right digital indicator (+ or -). The needle will then move to a position corresponding to another hole distance. When the needle is positioned just in front of the left hole, press the mirroring button and check that the needle pierces the right hole as well.

Now sew as many stitches as you consider necessary (usually 6–8) and press the reverse feed button. When you then depress the foot control the machine will sew four fastening stitches in one of the holes and then stop. As soon as you lift your foot from the foot control, the machine is ready to sew the next pair of holes or button.

When the buttons are sewn on, raise the feed teeth.

Button reed

When sewing buttons on garments, a shank is often required so that the button stands slightly away from the fabric. Use the button reed for this purpose. Use the thin end when sewing buttons on light fabrics, the thick end for heavier fabrics. Fix the button with a stitch. Raise the presser foot and place the button reed between the button and the fabric. Lower the presser bar and sew on the button.

Remove the button reed, pull the threads between the button and the fabric, wind them a few times around the shank and tie the ends.
