3)

Take notes here: Natural selection acts on individuals, but evolution acts on a population. Evolution acts on a population over time. Beneficial traits occur by random chance, not by necessities. Non beneficial traits do not disappear from disease. Acquired traits are not heritable. There are variations of sources of genetic variation. Mutations and gametes can cause new alleles. Altering Gene number or position. Rapid Reproductions. Sexual reproduction or Gene shuffling. A population is a group of individuals of the same species. interbreed and produce fertile offspring. A gene pool is a collection of all the alleles present in a population, the frequency of alleles indicating how common or rare a particular allele is for a trait. The founder effect increases the frequency of many genetic diseases. When a small group of individuals become separated from the larger(original) population. The bottleneck effect is a sudden change in the environment that drastically reduces genetic variation in already small populations, like cheetahs.
