Physical Processes Affect Energy Flow in Ecosystems

- 1. Temperature is the best predictor of species diversity, probably because both affect metabolic rates and body sizes.
- 2. Energy enters ecosystems as light. It is then captured by autotrophs in photosynthesis, providing the energy for the rest of the community.
- 3. Both climate and biological diversity are affected by evolution, and evolution is affected by climate through selection and speciation.
- 4. The high loss of disturbances causes that energy cannot be stored in standing crop, and is used for growth. Thus, and other processes separate energy from matter, the conservation of energy does not apply.
