

Greta Thunberg Climate Champion

By Eileen Judge

In 2018, one determined girl sat outside the Swedish Parliament every day for weeks with her handmade sign: Skolstrejk för klimatet (School Strike for the Climate). She wanted the Swedish government to recognize that the climate was in crisis and to do something about it. That girl was Greta Thunberg.

Greta Tintin Eleonora Ernman Thunberg was born in Sweden on January 3, 2003. Her one-person strike began when she was only 15—and made her one of the most famous and influential people in the world. Since then, she has spoken at numerous international conferences and events, including at the United Nations. Before Thunberg even turned 18, she had been given more than 20 prestigious awards and honors. In 2019 alone, she won the International Children's Peace Prize and the Rachel Carson Prize for outstanding work for the environment, and she became Time Person of the Year, the youngest person ever to be named.

So how did a 15-year-old girl become so famous and influential? And where did she find her courage and determination? Well, Thunberg's story might surprise you. She had been depressed about the climate crisis for a long time; she didn't talk much and barely ate. She wondered why politicians were not making the climate a top priority. Then, she decided to strike. At first, her parents were not pleased about her missing so much school, but her father saw that her action to help the planet was helping her, too. She was happier.

Thunberg kept up her strike, and over time, other people joined her. Eventually, enough people took part that she decided to continue to strike every Friday. The news and media began to cover the story. Thunberg and her fellow school strikers created the social media hashtag #FridaysForFutures. Soon Thunberg's small action became a worldwide movement. People everywhere participated in the strike—from Sweden to America to Germany, Japan, India, and beyond.

Thunberg has said she will keep speaking until her message is no longer ignored.
