

ANIMAL FARM: CHAPTER 9

Selene Ballón, Magaly Ramírez, Valentina Vettori

- The winter was tough again, the animals would work more hours and a new readjustment made the animals receive less food so that the pigs and dogs could have more. Squealer would tell the animals that they were better than during Jones' time, and that the production was always rising and the animals believed him, even though they would feel exhausted and hungry.
- 31 pigs were born. They were all educated behind closed doors by Napoleon and they weren't allowed to play with other animals.
- Pigs started to gain more benefits, such as being able to walk without other animals getting in their way and having barley.
- To forget how hungry they were, the animals would find ways to distract themselves from their work. There were many songs, speeches and Spontaneous Demonstrations started (a walk to the edges of the farm where the animals would sing songs and poems for Napoleon) which reminded them how hard they had fought and made them proud for being their own masters.
- The farm became a Republic and Napoleon was designated president.
- New documents appeared saying that Snowball fought with Jones against the animals during the Cow Barn Battle.
- Moses, the raven, came back and was allowed to stay without working and with a free beer everyday.
- Boxer, old and tired, collapsed one day during work. Squealer let Napoleon know and he made the decision to send him to a hospital in Willingdon. When the vehicle that would take him there arrived, Benjamin read what was written on it and alarmed the rest of the animals: the truck was on its way to a slaughterhouse. Clover told Boxer to get out but his strength wasn't enough.
- Three days later, Squealer told the animals that Boxer had died despite the doctors' attention and care and that the vet's vehicle had belonged to a slaughterhouse (that's why they had read that when Boxer was taken). He also said that before dying, Boxer encouraged his comrades to keep working for the rebellion and expressed that Napoleon is always right.
- During the Sunday meeting, Napoleon gave a speech in honor of Boxer and said that there would be a feast. Wood came from Willingdon. A lot of noise (singing and a fight maybe) was heard during the night, and the rumor that the pigs bought a box of whiskey was spreaded.
