1.7 QUALITY OF DESIGN VERSUS QUALITY OF CONFORMANCE

There are two major aspects of quality: Quality of design and quality of conformance. Quality of design as defined by the Business Dictionary, is "the level of effectiveness of the design process in determining a product's operational requirements and their incorporation into design requirements." This involves the variations of a product or service in grades or levels of quality, and includes the types of materials used in construction, tolerance in manufacturing, reliability, etc. Quality of conformance is also defined by the Business Dictionary as "the level of the effectiveness of the design and production functions in conforming to the product manufacturing requirements and process specifications while meeting process control limits, product tolerances and production targets."

Quality of conformance signifies how well the product conforms to the specifications and tolerances required by the design and is influenced by the choices of manufacturing processes, training and supervision of the workforce, the type of quality-assurance system used, as well as the motivation of the workforce to achieve quality.
