

Understanding Lucy Calkins' Writing Workshop Model: A Guide for Parents

(provided in part by Montclair Public Schools—Montclair, NJ)

I'm very excited to be able to share our new writing curriculum with first grade students this year. This new curriculum adheres to Common Core State Standards, and is based on 35 years of research and development made by the Teachers College at Columbia University, and spearheaded by the ever-talented Lucy Calkins. I know first grade students at Lindsay School are really going to enjoy becoming better writers, and I look forward to facilitating their progress.

The Teachers College Writing Workshop model allows students to have the "last" word by allowing students to take something commonplace in his/her life and give it meaning. Students learn that their lives are worth writing about, and that they should care about what they write. Using the foundations of the curriculum, students will see that writing is a craft, and they will enjoy learning how to become better readers through hard work and practice. Writing will happen every day, and students will write in a variety of ways that touch on several different genres. Students will not be assigned specific topics, but will have flexibility to choose to write about what matters to them, within the guidelines of the specific genre of study.

What does Writing Workshop look like in the classroom?

- Writing Workshop begins with a mini-lesson that teaches a new strategy: Teachers start with, "So far we've been.....Today I want to teach you..." or with an anecdote that connects to what the teaching point of the day is. Or the teacher can let students know that she has been thinking about them as writers and that she is going to teach them something that they are actually ready for: "Watch me as I..."

The teacher may begin with a sample of her own writing or a sample of someone else's writing, a specific to the unit or genre being studied or with a shared writing piece that the class is working on together.

- Helpful charts will be on display in the classroom. These charts are visual reminders that reinforce writing strategies; they may help with dialogue, structure, elaboration, or conventions.

- Ideas are generated and students practice telling their story to a partner. Storytelling is a rehearsal for writing; students develop ideas (time is spent on teaching students how to generate, and choose, a seed idea). Students may choose a good seed idea by asking themselves the following: Do I remember it well? Is this a moment that taught me something? Am I comfortable sharing it? Students may possibly create a timeline and identify their feelings at each point on the timeline.

- Nurturing and growing the seed idea comes next through rehearsal: students
