

What is Matter?

Article, Worksheet, & Answer Key

What is Matter?

Matter is anything that has mass and takes up space. That means matter must have weight and volume. If you can feel it, touch it, or see it, it's probably matter. Even things you can't see, like air, are still made of matter because they take up space and have mass.

The States of Matter

There are three main states of matter: solid, liquid, and gas. These states are based on how the tiny particles in matter change and how closely they are packed together.

- Solids have a fixed shape and volume. Their particles are in a solid and packed tightly and only vibrate in place. Think of a rock or a pencil.
- Liquids have a definite volume but no fixed shape. They take the shape of the container they are in. Water and juice are liquids. The particles in a liquid are close together but can slide past each other.
- Gases do not have a fixed shape or volume. They fill the entire space of the container they are in, like air or gas. The particles in a gas move freely and are spread far apart.

Changing Matter

Matter can change from one state to another when heat is added or removed. This is called a change of state or change in physical form. Here are some examples:

- Melting: solid to liquid (like ice melting into water)
- Freezing: liquid to solid (like water freezing into ice)
- Evaporation: liquid to gas (like water turning into vapor)
- Condensation: gas to liquid (like water droplets on a cold glass)

Physical and Chemical Changes

Matter can change in different ways. Some changes are physical changes—these do not create a new substance. For example, tearing paper or crushing glass are physical changes. The matter is still the same stuff.

Other changes are chemical changes. These make a new kind of matter. Burning wood or baking a cake causes chemical changes. After the change, the substances are no longer the same.

Mixtures and Solutions

Sometimes we combine different kinds of matter. A mixture is made when two or more substances are mixed together but can still be separated. That one is a good example.

A solution is a special kind of mixture. In a solution, one substance is dissolved in another and cannot be easily separated. For example, when you stir sugar into water, it dissolves and forms a solution.

Concentration of Matter

One of the most important ways to describe a substance is its concentration of matter. This means that matter cannot be created or destroyed, even when it changes form. If you heat up ice water, the water may look different, but the total amount of matter stays the same.
