Chapter 15: The Furnace of Civil War

Introduction

I. Antislavery Plan

After the failure of the Fremont's Campaign, the Union then turned toward what would later be called the Antislavery Plan, with its main components. First, the Union would directly nullify the South by abolishing the Fugitive Slave Act. Second, they would liberate the slaves, thereby crippling the army's economic base. Third, the Civil South in the process. Third, they would cut the Confederacy in half by taking control of the southern Mississippi River. Fourth, the North would bring the Confederacy to terms by attacking Virginia, the South's lifeline, and the Carolina. Fifth, they would demoralize the South by capturing the capital at Richmond, and sixth, they would try to psychologically engage the enemy's slave owners and spirit of their commanders. This military plan was usually interpreted by Northern Union and was not accepted by the Confederacy.

II. Bull Run

The First Battle of Bull Run was the first major battle of the Civil War. At first, neither Union nor the Confederacy expected a short battle and that would only last for merely days. A Confederate force sent, consisting of units and army strategy, launched an attack on the smaller Confederate army at Bull Run. However, when "Bull Run" Johnston's soldiers found that a Union unit (Union's 7th, 11th, and 12th) and Confederacy reinforcements arrived unexpectedly, panic took over the Union army, and the Union fled from battle. This victory for the South gave them an over-confident attitude that caused many Southerners to believe in defeat. This battle, in its defeat, was the southern's first major step toward a strategic war, although the Union is subsequently prepared that the conflict would be intense.

III. Peninsula Campaign
