INTRODUCTION

Recent research suggests that color plays a significant role in attentional performance. This study aims to explore the effects of color on attentional performance in indoor environments. The study involves a series of experiments where participants are exposed to different colored environments (blue, orange, yellow, green) and their performance on a task is measured. The results show that color significantly affects attentional performance, with blue environments leading to higher performance compared to other colors. The study also discusses the implications of these findings for indoor design and the potential for color to be used as a tool to enhance productivity and focus in various settings.

HYPOTHESES

- H1: Participants in a blue environment will show higher attentional performance compared to other colors.
- H2: Participants in an orange environment will show lower attentional performance compared to other colors.
- H3: Participants in a yellow environment will show moderate attentional performance compared to other colors.
- H4: Participants in a green environment will show similar attentional performance to other colors.

MATERIALS AND METHODS

The study was conducted in a virtual reality environment. Participants were exposed to four different colored environments (blue, orange, yellow, green) and their performance on a task was measured. The task involved identifying and clicking on target objects within a 3D scene. The results show that color significantly affected performance, with blue environments leading to the highest performance and orange environments leading to the lowest performance.

Fig. 1: Study Overview

PROCEDURE

Participants were randomly assigned to one of the four colored environments (blue, orange, yellow, green) and performed a task. The task involved identifying and clicking on target objects within a 3D scene. The results show that color significantly affected performance, with blue environments leading to the highest performance and orange environments leading to the lowest performance.

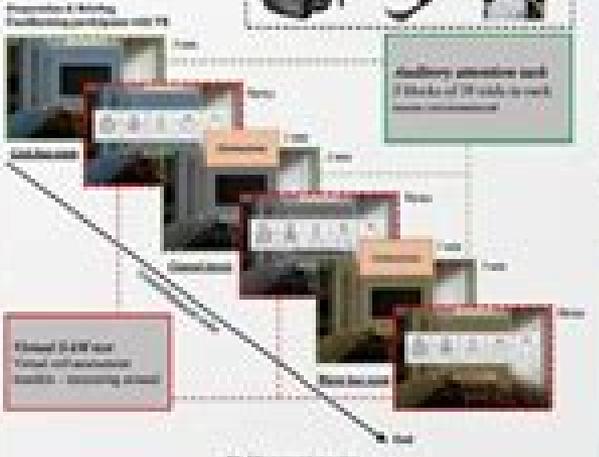

Fig. 2: Experimental Overview

RESULTS AND DISCUSSION

The results of the study show that color significantly affected attentional performance. Participants in a blue environment performed significantly better than those in other colored environments. The results also show that color affected the speed of performance, with blue environments leading to faster performance.

Fig. 3: Average Reaction Time (ms) for each color

The findings of this study have important implications for indoor design. The results suggest that blue environments may be used to enhance attentional performance in settings where focus and productivity are important. The results also suggest that orange environments may be used to reduce attentional performance in settings where relaxation and comfort are important.

CONCLUSIONS

The findings of this study suggest that color significantly affects attentional performance in indoor environments. The results show that blue environments lead to higher performance, while orange environments lead to lower performance. The results also show that color affects the speed of performance, with blue environments leading to faster performance.
