

1. 1. A patient with diabetes mellitus has been maintained on metformin (Glucophage) for regulation of her blood glucose levels. What should be included in this patient's teaching?

A. Report changes in voiding patterns.
B. Allow 8 weeks for optimal drug effectiveness.
C. Increase the amount of dietary carbohydrates.
D. Use bottles for insulin dosing.

2. 2. A patient with diabetes experiences the Somogyi effect. To prevent this complication, the nurse should instruct the patient to:

A. take his insulin each day at 2 P.M. (12:00 hours).
B. engage in physical activity daily.
C. increase his amount of regular insulin.
D. eat a protein and carbohydrate snack before retiring.

3. 3. A patient with diabetes is taking Lantus insulin. The nurse is aware that this insulin will most likely be administered:

A. in the morning.
B. at night.

A. Report changes in voiding patterns.

Metformin can cause renal complications, so the patient should be monitored for changes in renal function. Metformin is effective with the first dose. The amount of carbohydrates should be closely regulated and controlled in a diabetic diet.

D. eat a protein and carbohydrate snack before retiring.

The Somogyi effect is characterized by a drop in glucose levels at 2 or 3 A.M., followed by a threefold elevation in blood glucose levels. Eating a protein and carbohydrate snack (e.g., peanut butter and crackers) before going to bed prevents the hypoglycemia and rebound blood glucose elevation. Increasing activity does not change the Somogyi effect. Increasing the patient's regular insulin will not alter the Somogyi effect and may cause additional episodes of hypoglycemia.

B. at night.

Lantus insulin has a duration of 24 to 28 hours. It is most frequently administered at night for nocturnal and consistent control of blood glucose levels.
