

- UN 3242: Azodicarbonamide.
- Category C (low hazard) – classification 4.1.3C (equivalent to UN PG III)
A substance that has one of the following UN numbers in the Dangerous Goods List, chapter 3.2 of the UN Model Regulations:
  - UN 2956: 5-tert-Butyl-2,4,6-trinitro-m-xylene (musk xylene);
  - UN 3241: 2-Bromo-2-nitropropane-1,2-diol; or
  - UN 3251: Isc-Sorbide-5-mononitrate.

6.3.3. Discussion

Threshold for desensitized explosives

The HSN0 Act threshold criteria for subclass 4.1.3 are equivalent to those for division 4.1(c) as set out in the UN Model Regulations, including substances previously known as substances related to self-reactive substances.

Classification of desensitized explosives

The HSN0 Act classification categories A, B, and C for subclass 4.1.3, desensitized explosives and related substances, are equivalent to UN PGs I, II, and III, respectively, of division 4.1(c), solid desensitized explosives, as described in the UN Model Regulations.

The UN Model Regulations assign substances to this classification by analogy with existing substances. Subclass 4.1.3 also includes substances formerly classified by the UN as 'substances related to self-reactive substances'. These substances are similar to division 4.1.2 'self-reactive substances' but have an SADT greater than 75°C. They are liable to undergo a strongly exothermic decomposition and are liable, in certain packaging, to meet the criteria for explosive substances in class 1.

New products that are thermally stable and have, or are suspected of having, explosive properties should first be considered for class 1 using the class 1 acceptance procedure and, if necessary, the assignment procedure.

When a substance is assigned to class 1 but is diluted to be exempted from class 1 by Test Series B (see above), this diluted substance, when meeting the classification criteria or definition for another class or subclass, should be classified in that class or subclass at the highest concentration at which it is exempt from class 1. When sufficiently diluted, such substances may not meet the criteria for any class or subclass, and may be deemed non-hazardous in terms of the flammability criteria.

Nature of desensitized explosives

Desensitized explosives are substances that are generally wetted with water or alcohols or are diluted with other substances to suppress their explosive properties. In their unwetted or undiluted form, they are substances that would meet the criteria for class 1.

Explosive substances can be desensitized to different extents. For example, an explosive substance that is too sensitive to transport can be desensitized to a degree that enables it to be transported; but in this
